

On January 11, 2022, Data for Progress conducted a survey of 1,326 likely voters nationally using web panel respondents. The sample was weighted to be representative of likely voters by age, gender, education, race, and voting history. The survey was conducted in English. The margin of error is ±3 percentage points.

N=1,326 unless otherwise specified. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

[14] Do you think that rising coronavirus cases are a reason to pause consideration of the Build Back Better Act or should lawmakers still try to pass it?

		D	I	R
Lawmakers should still try to pass the Build Back Better Act because it will provide support to Americans and small businesses hurt because of the ongoing pandemic.	57%	81%	60%	30%
Lawmakers should pause consideration of the Build Back Better Act because of rising coronavirus cases which create uncertainty about the economic future of the country.	34	12	30	59

[15] Lawmakers in Congress are considering including investments in preparing for possible future pandemics in the Build Back Better Act.

This funding would be used to strengthen supply chains, expand early detection and testing capacity, speed up research for future treatments and vaccines, and increase the size of America's stockpile of supplies needed for responding to pandemics.

Do you support or oppose these investments in pandemic preparedness?

[17] When thinking about the investments in pandemic preparedness, which statement comes closer to your view, even if neither is exactly right?

	D	I	R
These investments will help make sure something like the coronavirus pandemic never happens again, ensuring schools and businesses aren't closed.	82%	58%	27%
These investments are another example of wasteful and unnecessary government spending that will be added to an out-of-control national debt.	11	32	63

[18] Now thinking about the Build Back Better Act more generally:

Supporters of the bill say it will help families deal with inflation by lowering costs for everyday things like prescription drugs, healthcare, and childcare.

Opponents of the bill say it is reckless government spending that will deepen the national debt and drive up inflation.
