

DATA FOR PROGRESS

From February 8 to 13, 2022, Data for Progress conducted a survey of 1,321 likely voters nationally using web panel respondents. The sample was weighted to be representative of likely voters by age, gender, education, race, and voting history. The survey was conducted in English. The margin of error is ±3 percentage points.

NB: subgroups with a n-size less than 50 (<50) are not shown on these cross-tabs. We choose not to display N<50 subgroups because the sample is too small to have statistical significance. We did, however, take samples of these subgroups for representational and weighting purposes to accurately reflect the electorate makeup. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

N=1,321 unless otherwise specified.

[4] This year, dozens of states are considering legislation to prevent children who identify as transgender from pursuing medical transition or participating in competitive sports.

Supporters of the legislation argue that these policies are necessary to ensure the fairness of children's sports and protect children from pursuing medical treatments they might later regret.

Opponents of this legislation argue that these policies unfairly discriminate against transgender children and will increase the rates at which transgender kids experience harassment and violence.

When thinking about this proposed legislation, which statement comes closer to your view, even if neither is exactly right?
