

From April 24 to 26, 2024, Data for Progress conducted a survey of 1,212 U.S. likely voters nationally using web panel respondents. The sample was weighted to be representative of likely voters by age, gender, education, race, geography, and voting history. Crosstabs include disability status which is based on respondent self-identification. The survey was conducted in English. The margin of error is ±3 percentage points.

NB: subgroups with a n-size less than 50 (<50) are not shown on these cross-tabs. We choose not to display N<50 subgroups because the sample is too small to have statistical significance. We did, however, take samples of these subgroups for representational and weighting purposes to accurately reflect the electorate makeup. Some values may not add up to 100 due to rounding.

N=1,212 unless otherwise specified.

[1] A conservatorship, which is also often called a guardianship, is when a court appoints a third party to take care of and make financial and/or personal decisions for an adult who has mental or physical limitations and is unable to care for themselves.

[4] Currently, parents with disabilities lack parental rights, which constitutionally give parents the right to direct the care, upbringing, and education of their children.

This means that parents with disabilities can lose custody of their child if the court determines they are unfit to take care of a child because of a disability, even in cases where there is no evidence of abuse or neglect.

When thinking about this, which of the following comes closer to your view, even if neither is exactly right?

[5] In 1927, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that state governments can legally require individuals with disabilities to go through sterilization, a process that removes their ability to have children, without the individual's permission.

Some states have made this practice illegal. However, this Supreme Court decision has never been overturned.
